

Christian Dea

Chief Economist and Director General, Transportation and Economic Analysis

Transport Canada

Christian Dea received his graduate degree in Economics from the University of Montreal.

As Chief Economist and Director General of the Transportation and Economic analysis group at Transport Canada, Christian Dea is responsible for providing advice to the Minister and the senior management of TC on the impact of economic and societal trends in Canada and around the world on the resilience and performance of Canadian supply chains and the transportation system in general.

During his career, Christian Dea held various positions in the federal and provincial public sector (i.e., Department of Finance federal and Quebec, Bank of Canada, Human Resources and Skills Development) and the private sector (National Bank of Canada), where he was responsible for economic forecasting, tax policy reforms of the federal-provincial sale tax, reform of the taxation regime of the financial sector, intergovernmental relations and development/implementation of new Transfer Agreement with provinces, and development/implementation of departmental knowledge and data management strategy, and economic services.